THE VALUE OF LIBRARIES

- 1> A good library is an ocean of information, whoes [whose] boundaries continue
- 2> to extend with the endless contribution if [of] the numerous treams [streams] of
- 1> knowledge. Thus, it has a peculiar facination [fascination] for scholars, and all those whose thirst for knowledge is instable.

The usefulness of libraries in the spread of knowledge has been proved through the years. The field of knowledge is so extensive and life is so brief that even the most avid reader can never expect to absorb it all. Those who have a love for knowledge, therefore, try to master only a small fraction of it. Even this requires reading of hundreds of books, cheap and expensive, new and old. But few people are able to buy all the books on
